Seascape by Dave White

Judith Adderley is extremely creative and uses her skills in calligraphy to produce beautiful handmade cards.

Charlotte Bates started knitting and making cards as a young child and since then her passion for creating things in this way has grown. She now sells items at New Milton Teen Market and local fetes as well as through her Facebook page.

David Comley has been turning wood as a hobby for about 30 years with pieces of his work now across the world. He has used his woodturning to raise funds for a Christian Charity which aims to keep the kids "off the streets" in Colombia. He enjoys producing unembellished pieces and loves adding colour and texture to enhance the natural timber. He demonstrates woodturning and welcomes commissions where the customer may observe and assist in the creation of the piece.

Marion Comley took up painting in her "middle age" when she discovered she wasn't very good at photography! She tried several mediums but prefers to use pastels and watercolours. Marion enjoys painting a variety of subjects including landscapes, animals and flowers. She describes herself as very much an amateur but enjoys the relaxation painting gives, when she can tear herself away from her garden!

Despite being the daughter of an artist Sheila Drake didn't really take an interest in painting until her father had died and her children grown up, she then began to attend different art classes. For many years Sheila has been attending an "Open Studio" and has tried many different subjects and media. She loves seascapes and boats and usually takes her own photographs to work from. Sheila prefers painting with acrylics and mixed media but has done watercolours. Her current project is painting a backdrop for her husband Phil's railway!

Caroline Farrow has always enjoyed being creative but until retirement did not have time to take up painting. She went to some excellent classes to get started with the learning process and found that it is ongoing, which is part of the enjoyment and challenge. Caroline finds watercolour particularly appealing due to the translucency of the medium.

You can see her work on the Christchurch Art Guild Website and at their various exhibitions. <https://www.christchurchartsguild.co.uk/>

Jill Goodey has been painting since childhood, she uses oils, watercolours, pastels and pen. Recently she exhibited in Southampton Municipal Art Gallery, St Barbe's and the New Forest Art Centre.

Hazel Harrison started making her own clothes as a pennywise student nurse, then as time went on she began to produce items for other people. She thoroughly enjoys working with textiles and since purchasing a new sewing machine on her retirement has focused on quilting projects and fashionable bags of American design. She is happy to make things to order.

Sally and Owen Phillips have been weaving and spinning for a relatively short time. Retirement has allowed them to creatively explore the world of yarn with enthusiasm and the result has been a range of neck-warmers, scarves and bags inspired by their love of nature, gardening and other people's stories. The therapeutic and relaxing qualities of the processes involved have lifted their spirits and they are keen to share this with others and keep the art alive.

They belong to a locally based spinning, knitting and weaving group:

Jean Sansum really enjoys painting in watercolour and although her subjects vary she particularly likes to paint the flowers she sees in hedgerows and flower beds.

Pat Waterman's hobby when she was younger was painting with oils. After many years of neglect she has rediscovered the pleasure of painting, this time with acrylics or watercolours. Her main interests are the seaside and flowers.

Dave White is an award winning artist who specialises in Animal Portraits, is the artist in residence for the Rhinefield House Hotel and the author of the best-selling book "Sea and Sky in Acrylics."
